DETAILED ACTION

Priority

1. Acknowledgment is made of applicant's claim for foreign priority based on an application filed in the United Kingdom on 08/19/1999. It is noted, however, that applicant has not filed a certified copy of the 9919681.8 application as required by 35 U.S.C. 119(b).

Claim Objections

2. Claim 1 is objected to because of the following informalities: applicant should remove the commas in line 10 since they are not necessary. Appropriate correction is required.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1, 2, 5, 8, 9, and 18 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over US Patent No. 5,871,494 (Simons et al.) in view of US Patent No. 5,569,189 (Parsons).

The devices of Simons and Parsons are similar in that they both include spring driven mechanisms for piercing the skin. The Simons device drives a lancet into the skin, while the Parsons device drives liquid into the skin. Since both devices are adapted for skin piercing and the structures of the driving mechanisms are very similar, they are considered to be of analogous art.

Simons discloses a skin piercing device in Figures 5A and 5B that includes a barrel (526), lancet carrying means (210) at the forward part of the barrel, and a hammer (542) that causes advance of the lancet (216). A driver spring (552) is positioned to the rear of the hammer (542) and a trigger (538) is provided for holding and releasing the hammer.

The device further includes barrier (528) that is adjusted axially by rotation. Simons explains that rotation of the barrier (528) relative to the casing (526) changes the length of compression of a spring (532) (column 12, lines 55-64).

Parsons discloses another type of skin piercing device in Figure 5 that includes a barrel (30), a hammer (28), a barrier (42) to the rear of the hammer, a spring (34) between the barrier and the hammer, and a trigger mechanism (column 10, lines 6-32) for holding and releasing the hammer. Parsons explains that rotation of the barrier (42) adjusts the axial length, or compression, of the spring (34) (column 9, lines 10-28). The spring drives the hammer, which acts on a plunger (8) to drive liquid into the skin.

Simons fails to position the adjustable barrier to the rear of the hammer, but Simons does include a structure that adjusts the compression of a spring by selectively altering the axial location of a barrier that acts to the rear of the spring. Parsons teaches that an adjustable barrier can be positioned to the rear of a hammer of a skin piercing device to alter the driving force of the hammer. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to position the axially adjustable barrier of Simons to the rear of the driver spring and hammer, as Parsons teaches that this particular arrangement of parts allows the driving force of the hammer to be altered.

Regarding claim 2, the outer threads of the barrier and inner threads of the barrel can be described as "slots skew to the axis of the barrel in which projections on the barrier engage."

Regarding claim 5: Simons includes a sleeve (562) on the rear portion that is spring (568) urged forwardly. The sleeve retracts the hammer when pulled back and disconnects from the hammer when released to move forward (column 12, lines 16-26).

Regarding claims 8, 9, and 18: Simons includes a removable nose section (210) of the barrel (Figure 3C). A lancet carrying means (224) is tubular, spring urged rearwardly (228), and a lancet (216) fits into the forward end.
